

The Hungarian Society of Massachusetts cordially invites you to a presentation to be held at Harvard University by

Tamas Magyarics

Central Europe: An Old/New Gateway for Russia to Europe?

February 9, 2007, Friday at 4:15pm

Cabot Room

Center for European Studies

Harvard University

(27 Kirkland Street, Cambridge).

Tamás Magyarics, Ph. D., Dr. habil.

Associate Professor of History at the Department of American Studies, ELTE, Budapest

Senior Research Fellow at the Foreign Affairs Institute, Budapest

Editor-in-Chief of the Külügyi Szemle and the Foreign Policy Review

Visiting Professor at the Institute of European Studies, Vienna;

Professor at the International Studies Center, Corvinus University, Budapest.

His major fields of research include the history of the U.S. foreign policy, the U.S.-Central-European relations during the Cold War, the transatlantic relations, and the theory of international relations.

He did research in, among others, the following institutions: the Harry S. Truman Library, the Dwight D. Eisenhower Library, the John F. Kennedy Library, the Lyndon B. Johnson Library, the Hoover Institution, the National Archives and the Library of Congress in Washington, D.C. Education and degrees: M.A. at Eötvös Loránd University, Budapest (1981); graduate studies at Louisiana State University, Baton Rouge (1984-1986); university doctorate at ELTE, Budapest (1987); candidate's degree (Ph. D.), Academy of Sciences, Budapest (1997), Dr. habil (Budapest, 2006). Major publications: The U.S. and Central Europe, 1921-1925 (1987); The U.S.—Hungarian Diplomatic Relations, 1957-1967 (1997); The History of American Foreign Policy (2000); The U.S. As a Global Power (2001); British Foreign Policy Towards East-Central Europe since 1918 (2003); American Political Conservatism (2004); The Prospects and the Scope for Manoeuvre of Hungarian Foreign Policy at the Start of the 21st Century (2004); Fifty Years of British Security Policy (2005).

Directions: <http://www.ces.fas.harvard.edu/about/directions.html>